You will hear a review about an exhibition being held in Chelsea, London. For questions 7 – 14, complete the sentences with a word or short phrase.

From Sloane Square to World's End: The King's Road

This exhibition is a collection of visual art that looks at a particularly famous London street. This road originally got its name by being a private road for the monarch but became known in the 20th century as representative of everything (7) about London, and in fact Britain. The (8) styles to be seen at each end of the road, in Sloane Square and World's End Estate, are also symbolic of the contrasting characteristics of the street itself.

Many of the photographs were taken by world famous photographers, and include a series of pictures with the (9) in the background which show some of the people that were to be seen on King's Road at the beginning of the 1980s. Some of these people are well dressed, some have things like safety pins and (10) decorating their clothes and others are in uniforms.

Other photos showing the department store and its (11), a girl called Gina in purple and white clothes from the sixties, and a famous entrepreneur and a fashion designer who were partners (12) romantically.

The reviewer's favourite image, however, is of the innovative Glaciarium, which was a (13) where London's richer residents could go ice skating in the 19th century. She recommends the exhibition particularly as it portrays the (14) of London in recent times and encourages listeners to go.
